A-HA THE MOVIE

The story of a-ha started in the early 80s with the monster hit Take on me, friendship, big dreams and musical ambitions. 35 years later, they struggle with jealousy, honor and arguments about money. The wife of one of the band members says they all need a shrink. One each, and one together. With unique access to the band during the last three years of shooting, the filmmakers follow Morten Harket, Magne Furuholmen, and Pål Waaktaar closely, the mission is to find out why did it end up like this? Combined with rare stock footage, animation and lots of music, the film sets out to be their group therapy, telling the story from the beginning.

DIAGNONSENSE

A self-reflexive meta-documentary, Diagnonsense begins with filmmaker Ane-Martha Tamnes Hansgard who was diagnosed with multiple mental disorders over a fifteen-year period and prescribed a staggering number of psychotropic medications. Ten years ago, she embarked on the first of many attempts to make a film about living with a mental disorder, but each effort was cut short due to new diagnoses, new medications, and new side effects. Now, having weaned herself off the drugs, and obtaining a critical distance from her diagnoses, she is ready to tell her story and to challenge the very need for psychological labeling.

OH, IT HERTZ!

Laurie Amat is a musician on a mission: To reveal how we all are manipulated by sound. What she didn't know was that Nazis were involved. There is a myth that the Nazis, during WWII, pushed through a new standard for tuning musical instruments. They changed its Hertz level, because they believed it would be easier to manipulate people. This is the music we still listen to today. To unveil the myth, we will meet passionate characters showing how sound affects us. Amat will lead the way with memories, humour and anecdotes. Why do certain sounds mean so much to us? And what is the very last sound you want to hear in your life?
